

Jeremy Warren

Jeremy Warren has a solid foundation in both the public and private sectors and more than a decade of experience in the political arena. He understands the ever-changing and evolving world of communication outreach extremely well. That makes him uniquely qualified to add exceptional value to the Strategic Partnerships consulting team and to the clients they serve.

Jeremy most recently served as president of a public relations and public affairs business that he founded. The firm provided marketing and media strategies, advertising campaigns and business development plans and implementation for private sector clients. Prior to that, he was employed by The Greater Houston Partnership, an organization of businesses in the Houston area that promote the city's growth. In that role, he worked with communications professionals, public officials, departments of state, county and local governments, other associations, the media, large employers and elected officials.

In the government arena, Jeremy served as the director of communications and press secretary for numerous elected officials including press secretary for a member of the U.S. House of Representatives. In those roles, he orchestrated national media campaigns, conducted research, provided outreach to constituencies and developed media and marketing strategies. He is experienced and familiar with the many specific nuances of every jurisdictional level of government.

Jeremy holds a bachelor's degree in government from The University of Texas at Austin.
